

Salām

in verschiedenen Schriftstilen

The word 'Salām' is written in the Nasta'liq script, a highly cursive style used in Persian calligraphy. The letters are closely connected, with the 'lam' at the end being particularly elongated and decorative.

Nasta'liq / Farsī
persisch

The word 'Salām' is written in the Ruq'a script, a semi-cursive style used in Ottoman Turkish calligraphy. It is more upright and less cursive than Nasta'liq.

Ruq'a
osmanisch

The word 'Salām' is written in the Dīwānī script, a highly decorative and cursive style used in Ottoman Turkish calligraphy. It features large, bold letters with intricate flourishes.

Dīwānī
osmanisch

The word 'Salām' is written in the Nashī script, a semi-cursive style used in Arabic and Ottoman Turkish calligraphy. It is more upright and less cursive than Ruq'a.

Nashī / Neshi
arabisch / osmanisch

The word 'Salām' is written in the Mağribī script, a semi-cursive style used in Maghrebi Arabic calligraphy. It is more upright and less cursive than Ruq'a.

Mağribī
maghrebisch

The word 'Salām' is written in the Eastern Kūfī script, a semi-cursive style used in Persian calligraphy. It is more upright and less cursive than Ruq'a.

Östliche Kūfī
persisch

The word 'Salām' is written in the Antike Kūfī script, a semi-cursive style used in Arabic calligraphy. It is more upright and less cursive than Ruq'a.

Antike Kūfī

The word 'Salām' is written in the Ĝalī-Dīwānī script, a highly decorative and cursive style used in Ottoman Turkish calligraphy. It features large, bold letters with intricate flourishes.

Ĝalī-Dīwānī / Çeli-Diwani
osmanisch

The word 'Salām' is written in the Ṭuluṭī script, a semi-cursive style used in Arabic and Ottoman Turkish calligraphy. It is more upright and less cursive than Ruq'a.

Ṭuluṭī / Sülüsi
arabisch / osmanisch